Black San Francisco Ballet Dancer Angela Watson Performs in Oakland Premiere of Misty Copeland Film "FLOWER" Event

By Carolyn Evans

On Friday, Sept. 29 at 7 p.m. at Oakland Paramount Theatre, Oakland Ballet Company and Life in Motion Productions will present the Oakland premiere of "Flower," a short film starring and produced by international ballet trailblazer Misty Copeland.

Angela Watson, a Black ballerina from the Oakland-Bay Area who is the newest member of the San Francisco Ballet Company and appears courtesy of Tamara Rojo, its new artistic director.

Watson's invitation to perform at the premiere of "Flower" at the behest of the Oakland Ballet Com-into the pantheon of principal dancers at the American Ballet Theatre. Since then, Black ballerinas have been blazing new trails. Watson's journey to become a ballerina began at Oakland Shawl-Anderson Dance Center then Oakland Ballet Company.

Onesimus. It is a name we don't hear when we look at the history of vaccinations, but in the United States we owe a debt of gratitude to an African Slave named, Onesimus. In this video, voiced by writer and political activist, Baratunde Thurston, learn how Onesimus shared a traditional African inoculation technique that saved countless lives from Smallpox and became the foundation for vaccine as we know them today, including the COVID Vaccine.
